PH.D. DISSERTATION

Customer service and its challenges in college admissions consulting

My Ph.D. dissertation was an ethnography on two college admissions consulting firms, Icarus and Sparta. These firms provided professional consulting services for Asian students applying to colleges and universities in English-speaking countries. All three chapters of my dissertation employ ethnographic data to conceptualize emotional labor, sociomateriality, resistance and coping, and processes of social reproduction via the translation of Bourdieu's four forms of capital in Asian societies.

OTHER EXPERIENCE

Symposium Organizer, Academy of Management (AOM) annual meeting, August 2019

Symposium title: “Inequalities and the fight for inclusiveness: Unpacking the varied experiences of migrant workers.”

I organized this symposium with my colleague Carrie Wang to offer insights into the various work and life experiences of migrant workers, all of whom are challenged by their environments and many of whom are marginalized.

This symposium consisted of four studies examining: 1) multi-level factors influencing ascriptive inequality towards migrant workers; 2) individuals who return to mainland China to pursue entrepreneurial opportunities; 3) the impact of social categories and group esteem theory on different immigrant groups; and 4) workers who do advocacy work for immigrant rights.

This symposium was selected to be featured in the 2019 All-Academy Theme “Understanding the Inclusive Organization.”
